Business Description

Users in more than 100 countries count on LexisNexis Group to flex its information muscle. A unit of publishing giant Reed Elsevier Group, the company offers subscribers access to thousands of sources -- including newspaper, magazine, and journal articles, and public records -- through the Internet, CD-ROMs, and books. The bulk of its content -- culled from more than 16,000 databases -- focuses on legal, business, government, and tax information. LexisNexis launched the Nexis news and business information research service in 1980; the company became part of Reed Elsevier Group in 1994.
